GLOUCESTER, Mass., Nov. 12. Thomas Wadsworth, Wm. Hastings and John Whalen were drowned in Ipswich Bay Monday night. They, with three companions, anchored their vessel at a fishing station and proceeded to the shore to get some food. Search was made and the body found, also the hat and boots of one of the men but no trace of the bodies. Padworth and Whalen each leave a widow and five children. LAUNCHING POSTPONED. A large crowd of people assembled at the wharf yesterday forenoon to witness the launching of the new new hulkette Thomas J. Stewart, on board which were the builders, owners, members of their families and a large number of invited guests. The day was fine and everything seemed propitious for an auspicious launching but when the wedges were driven home and the blocks knocked away, at half past ten o'clock, through the fault of the fallow wind the vessel stubbornly refused to slide from the ways into the water, and notwithstanding the powerful application of the force of the steam tug Ralph Ross, only a distance of three to four feet was covered toward reaching the water. The tide having then fallen so much the launching was postponed until Tuesday at 10 o'clock, when it is believed everything will pass off satisfactorily.

During the night of the tug to pull the hulk out of the ways a crowd of one of butts on the Ross to give way, but fortunately no one was hurt. It is expected that another good crowd will attend the launching to-day.

THE DANGERS OF EXCESSIVE REALISM.

The dangers of excessive realism on the stage are being learned by Sarah Bernhardt, now that she has a little taste to appreciate the art in the death scene of "Cleopatra." The state really divides honors with the stage. For his writings about the actress's neck and his real appearance and her real conduct concentrate the attention of spectators as nothing else could. "There were no eyes," says the Paris correspondent of the Courrier des Etats Unis. "For the great actress, whose splendid death was completely lost in the twinkling of the eye."

The camera is booming, as no doubt the photograph will soon become a recognized accessory of any historic scene. The crowning triumph of the Moltke celebration was a presentation to him by the Emperor, standing amidst a galaxy of fellow-heroes, Generals and statesmen. The Emperor concluded by asking the count to accept a new Moltke's baton of silver insignificantly laden with stars and crosses of rubies and diamonds. Count Moltke could only find a few brief and incoherent words to say to the Emperor.

The Emperor's hand had imprinted on it a long and fervent kiss. A photographer in attendance saluted his subject, and the negative will be developed by Fred von Scherbrun into a grand historic picture.
